

Tuesday, July 26, 2005 marks the 15th anniversary of the The Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), a milestone in our Nation's quest to guarantee the civil rights of all citizens. Since becoming law, the ADA has helped to improve the quality of life for more than 54 million Americans with disabilities. As a result, it is easier today for people with disabilities to find a job, to enter public buildings, and to live more independently in their communities.

On February 1, 2001, President Bush announced the New Freedom Initiative—a comprehensive program to promote the full participation of people with disabilities in all areas of society by increasing access to assistive and universally designed technologies, expanding educational and employment opportunities, and promoting increased access into daily community life.

By striving to ensure that no American is denied access to employment, education, cultural activities, or community life because of a disability, we strengthen our Nation. Through these and other efforts, we will continue to build on the progress of the ADA, and, by doing so, hold fast to our Nation's faith in the promise and potential of every person.
