Kim Lane Scheppelle is the Laurance S. Rockefeller Professor of Sociology and International Affairs at Princeton University. Starting with the fall of the Berlin Wall, she has documented the political and legal changes in post-communist Europe, working at the constitutional courts of both Hungary and Russia. Since 2010, she has tracked the rise of autocratic legalism first in Hungary and then in Poland as well as the challenges both pose to the European Union because they have compromised the independence of their judiciaries. Scheppelle is an elected member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and the International Academy of Comparative Law. She is a recipient of the Law and Society Association's Kalven Prize for influential scholarship. She began her career in the political science department at the University of Michigan, became a professor of law at the University of Pennsylvania and has held visiting faculty positions in the law schools at Michigan, Yale, Harvard, Erasmus/Rotterdam, and Humboldt/Berlin. She is a former president of the Law and Society Association and is presently a member of the executive committee of the International Association for Constitutional Law as a "global jurist."
