

OVERVIEW

The White House Council on Environmental Quality Internship Program is a unique opportunity that comes with a high level of responsibility. As an intern, you will work on a wide variety of assignments pertaining to environmental protection, environmental justice, conservation, climate change, and sustainability policy. Duties include but are not limited to: researching policy issues; assisting the staff in drafting fact sheets, memos, and blogs; attending meetings; liaising with external stakeholders; managing projects; performing administrative tasks; and other duties as assigned.

This is a paid internship and it will be in person in Washington, D.C. Interns may not receive a separate outside source of funding from any third-party organization in connection with their participation. Please note that living accommodations and relocation support will not be provided. All interns must indicate their COVID-19 vaccination status prior to the start of the program and must adhere to any White House-determined COVID-19 protocols.
